

Film
Flavorwire's Guide to Indie Flicks to See in September

Music
Jay-Z, Run-DMC, and More: The Made in America Fest in Photos

Architecture
Fascinating Photos of 11 Abandoned Schools

Books
12 of the Most Beautiful Literary Magazines Online

Television
10 Fictional TV Duos We'd Like to See Team Up Again

Books
Exclusive Peek: See 'Romeo and Juliet' Re-imagined in '80s Brooklyn

“On the roof, in the morning, it's just me and the sky.”
- Ellyce D., EmblemHealth Employee and Yoga Enthusiast

EmblemHealth
WHAT CARE FEELS LIKE.

Get to know us better ▶

PHOTOGRAPHY

Andy Warhol's Best (and Most Bizarre!) Photos

by Paul Laster. Posted on 2:30 pm Tuesday Apr 10, 2012

Tweet 7 Like 523 Send +1 +6

« Previous

1 of 30

Next »

If Andy Warhol were alive today he would be totally digital. After all, Warhol embraced all forms of media in his day — recording lunchtime conversations and turning them into articles for his Interview magazine; directing avant-garde films, music videos, and SNL shorts; shooting Polaroids of the rich and famous for his portrait paintings; and using point-and-shoot cameras to document even the most mundane moments of his colorful life. Two current New York exhibitions explore Warhol as a man with a camera, that's nearly always in hand.

Andy Warhol: Photographer at Danziger Gallery offers a slew of color Polaroids of celebrity pals — ranging from Debbie Harry, Liza Minnelli, and Sylvester Stallone to Ted Kennedy and downtown drag queens — along with photo-booth pictures of stylish New Yorkers and black-and-white snapshots of hotel dining carts, naked guys on a Montauk beach, and supermarket shelves full of cat food. Meanwhile, Warhol: Confections & Confessions at Affirmation Arts presents 8 x 10 B+W photographs from the Andy Warhol Museum in Pittsburgh of subjects for paintings — including scattered eggs, a hammer and sickle, and various shadows — as well as such offbeat pictures as breast-feeding moms, still lives that feature a bug sprayer, and candid shots of Warhol posing with nuns and getting frisky on roller skates. Click through to view a selection of our favorites.

Andy Warhol: Photographer is on view at Danziger Gallery through April 21, while Warhol: Confections & Confessions at Affirmation Arts, which is also showing some of Warhol films, runs through May 5.

Tags: Andy Warhol, Debbie Harry, Elizabeth Taylor, John Lennon, Keith Haring, Sylvester Stallone

YOUR PERSONALIZED FLAVORPILL

SIGN UP

FOLLOW US: IPHONE APP: